- There are over 30 homeless shelters in the metro area
- Some 11 battered woman shelters in the metro area
- On Jan. 30, 2017, there were 5,116 homeless individuals counted in the Denver metro area.
- In Aurora alone there are more than 400. The city has spent $4,500,000 the last 3 years to “help” the homeless but the number still is growing.
- We will always have the homeless, we can help them.
- The Arapahoe County Jail on Potomac has a visitor program for those who would like to visit a person who needs a visit and someone to talk to. Arapahoe County Justice Center is located at 7325 S. Potomac St., Centennial, CO 80112. \(720\) 874-3500874-3500)
- The VA report shows a total of 20.6 suicides every day. Of those, 16.8 were veterans and 3.8 were active-duty servicemembers, guardsmen and reservists. That amounts to 6,132 veterans and 1,387 servicemembers who died by suicide in one year. Or 16.8 per day, 1 every hour and 25 min.

The Great Smog Begins

Clear skies dawned over London on December 5, 1952. A wintry cold snap had gripped the British capital for weeks, and as Londoners awoke, coal fireplaces were stoked in homes and businesses across the city to take the chill from the early morning air.

As the day progressed, a veil of fog—not unusual in a city famous for its cool, misty weather—began to enshroud Big Ben, St. Paul's Cathedral, London Bridge and other city landmarks.

Within a few hours, however, the fog began to turn a sickly shade of yellowish brown as it mixed with thousands of tons of soot pumped into the air by London's factory smokestacks, chimneys and automobiles. Smoky, diesel-fueled buses had recently replaced the city's electric tram system, adding to the toxic brew. Nonetheless, Londoners went about their business with typical British reserve, ignoring the foul air as much as possible. But within a day, it became impossible to ignore the unfolding crisis.

Health Effects of the Great Smog

The Great Smog of 1952 was much more than a nuisance. It was lethal, particularly for the elderly, young children and those with respiratory problems. Heavy smokers were especially vulnerable because of their already-impaired lungs, and smoking was common at the time, especially among men.

It wasn't until undertakers began to run out of coffins and florists out of bouquets that the deadly impact of the Great Smog was realized. Deaths from bronchitis and pneumonia increased more than sevenfold. The death rate in London's East End increased ninefold.

Initial reports estimated that about 4,000 died prematurely in the immediate aftermath of the smog.

The detrimental effects lingered, however, and death rates remained well above normal into the summer of 1953. Many experts now estimate the Great Smog claimed at least 8,000 lives, and perhaps as many as 12,000.
